Call Collins

How to use the writing room

October 29, 2026

Call Collins is a private writing room for The Everglades Foundation. You sign in with your email and your name, say who the remarks are for and what they need to do, and the room writes them. You can then shorten them, shape them for a board table, or turn them into lines you can say out loud.

Open the room in a browser at callcollins.yacosta-240.workers.dev. Use the same email each time. Your drafts stay with that email.

Ask for remarks

On the sign-in page, type your email and your name, then choose Enter the room.

1. If an older draft is open, choose New remarks at the top of the left column.
2. Audience. Who will hear or read this.
3. Occasion. The event, the meeting, or the letter.
4. The point. The one thing these remarks must land.
5. Notes. Paste the brief in your own words. Put names, dates, and figures here. The room uses what you give it.
6. Brief file, if you have one. You may attach a single PDF, Word file, or text file along with the notes. The room reads the words. It does not keep the file.
7. Choose Draft remarks. The words appear on the page as they are written. Wait until they stop.

Your drafts are listed on the left, named by the point you typed. Choose one to open it again.

Change a draft

When remarks are on the page, three buttons sit under them. Each button adds a new version on the same draft. Earlier versions stay above it.

- Shorter cuts the remarks down and keeps the point and the occasion.
- More boardroom takes out the ceremony and speaks to a decision at the table.
- Talking points turns the remarks into short lines you can say.

When a version is the one you want to keep, choose Add to my shelf. That copy belongs to your account. The next time you ask for remarks close to the same occasion, the room favors the newer pieces on your shelf.

Add documents so the voice grows

House voice is the shared collection of real writing. Everyone who signs in draws on it. Add speeches, letters, talking points, and handouts the foundation actually uses. The more of that writing the room can read, the closer new remarks stay to it.

Add the files

1. In the left column, find House voice.
2. Choose the files. PDF, Word (.docx), and plain text are accepted. You may choose more than one file.
3. Speaker. Type the name of the person who gave the remarks or signed the letter. If you leave this blank, the room files the example under Mike Collins.
4. Title. A short name for the piece. If you leave it blank, the file name is used. One title covers every file you add in that batch, so add different speeches one at a time.
5. Audience, occasion, and date, when you know them. For the date, type the day the remarks were given, such as 2026-03-24. The room favors newer pieces and pieces close to the occasion you ask for.
6. Choose Add examples. The page returns to the room, and the new titles appear under House voice.

Refresh the style card

When the batch is in, choose Refresh style card and wait for the page to return. The short paragraph under Style card is the room's note on how the writing should sound: how long the sentences run, how a point opens, and what this voice leaves out. Refresh at the end of a batch. You do not need to refresh after every single file.

What to add, and what to leave out

Add these:

- Remarks from a gala, a dedication, a coalition meeting, or a board table.
- Letters the foundation sent.
- Talking points and handouts written for the foundation.
- A later draft of a speech already in the room. The newer one is favored.

Leave these out:

- Newspaper and magazine articles. Those belong to someone else.
- A Word file whose name ends in .doc. In Word, use Save As and choose Word Document (.docx) or PDF, then upload that copy.
- A file larger than 6 MB. Split it, or save a smaller copy.
- A scan that is only a picture of a page. If the room says the file has no readable text, paste the words into a text file and upload the text file.

Before you leave

- Sign out is at the bottom of the left column. The next person on this computer should sign in with their own email.
- If Draft remarks does nothing, turn on JavaScript in the browser. The words will not appear without it. Adding files, saving to your shelf, and signing in still work.
- If a message appears at the top of the page, read it and try the step again. A brief you already sent stays with that draft.
- House voice is shared with every account. Your drafts and your shelf stay with you. Another person's shelf does not appear in your room.

The room is open at callcollins.yacosta-240.workers.dev.
